equity. The NYSE requires that the average global market capitalisation of a listed company during any 30 day consecutive trading period shall not fall below $50m and that the total shareholders' equity shall not be below $50m. In the 30 day consecutive trading period ended 8 August 2003, British Energy's average global market capitalisation was $49.2m.

British Energy is currently in discussions with the NYSE with respect to its ability to meet the minimum market capitalisation criteria and is reviewing the options available to the Company going forward.

With effect from 29 August, the NYSE will transmit the indicator "BC" along with the trading information relating to British Energy to indicate that the company is currently below the minimum market capitalisation and shareholders' equity criteria for continued listing.
