EMC's Point of View on LEGATO Solutions

Mark Lewis, EVP of Open Software and CTO of EMC, provides his perspective

Information Protection

LEGATO NetWorker® provides the base for EMC's long term strategy for information protection. The need to recover and protect data faster while reducing storage ownership costs without compromising service levels has never been greater in today's enterprise. NetWorker's market and performance leadership including key advantages in disk-based backup/recovery, coupled with DiskXtender, the industry's #1 HSM solution for open systems, profoundly enhances our customer's ability to achieve comprehensive information lifecycle management. These solutions and their ability to work in open and heterogeneous environments are central to the future of the EMC/LEGATO union, as it will enable both companies to fulfill customer needs with a solution suite that is unparalleled. NetWorker will be EMC's leading information protection offering after the acquisition.

Availability

Availability is inherent in every aspect of our combined offerings. EMC and LEGATO already share customers using the combination of LEGATO AAM and EMC SRDF to achieve their business continuity. LEGATO Availability products offer capabilities for performance management, availability and disaster recovery, which help to extend and complement EMC's current availability offerings, and provide LEGATO customers assurance of their business continuance.

Content

EMC has a long-standing belief that content management solutions play an integral role in generating market demand for storage solutions. Specifically, these applications take data from cradle to grave. With the LEGATO acquisition, EMC will have a complete information lifecycle management (ILM) offering that will be substantially strengthened with the addition of LEGATO's world-class content management suite of solutions. Additionally, this product suite fits very nicely into EMC's strategic vision related to our very public commitment to content addressed storage.

Messaging

Email continues to be a target for legal discovery and a key challenge for regulatory compliance, not to mention the ever-growing complexities it creates from a pure storage perspective. The unique capabilities of LEGATO's EmailXtender® suite allow organizations to effectively manage the entire information lifecycle of email records as legal documents, a critical requirement for regulated industries. Combining its ability to work in heterogeneous environments, which is part of our open software strategy, we will strengthen and accelerate the delivery of our combined solutions to the market.

Additional Information and Where to Find it.
