The following is an excerpt from Sprint's Mobile World Congress Americas 2018 coverage, available at the following link: <http://newsroom.sprint.com/sprint-and-softbank-at-mobile-world-congress-americas-2018.htm>

Sept. 12, 2018 - Marcelo Claude Delivers MWCA Opening Keynote

Marcelo Claude, Sprint executive chairman, chief operating officer for SoftBank Group Corp., and chief executive officer for SoftBank International, today opened the 2018 Mobile World Congress Americas keynote sessions with a plug for the proposed Sprint/T-mobile merger.

Most of you know Sprint is in the process of merging with T-Mobile. I'm frequently asked, "Why did it take you so long to pursue this merger?" Especially when Sprint just announced record customer growth and record financial performance. And the answer is the same; it's clear, simple and always the same—and it's 5G. We waited until we could jointly announce that TOGETHER we will build the world's most advanced 5G network.

Claude said when the merger gets approved, the combined company would bring to America—and to the world—the best 5G network. "We will build the world's most advanced mobile 5G network that will benefit not only consumers but will stimulate competition in the U.S. market," he said. "Together, we plan to create a network that's going to have the highest capacity mobile network in U.S. history."

He added the combined company would cover all of America, with support from our partners we have all over rural America. And, more importantly, the new company would deliver lower prices—and create thousands of new jobs. He promised more job creation on Day 1 than either company can do alone.

Claude, who also mentioned SoftBank's innovation in artificial intelligence and robotics, cited the high quality of American networks—something that helped create the world's most valuable companies—and that companies like Apple, Facebook, Alphabet, Amazon and Netflix adapted their businesses and saw explosive growth—all because of 4G!

He also said America can't afford to lose its leadership in 5G. The incredible economic impact has awakened countries like China and South Korea, which are fighting hard in the race to 5G.

I want to be very clear: The only way the U.S. remains the leader in 5G is by allowing Sprint and T-Mobile to merge. The combined company has the necessary spectrum assets and the financial strength to build the world's leading 5G network and allow the U.S. to continue its leadership position.
